Alex Dogboy is a Spanish comic book created by Manuel Bartlett and his son David. It's written and drawn in a frank and humorous way, telling the story of how the boy awakened people's salvation. The concept behind this story is that even children can be "born again," which unites them with God and changes their life forever. This comic has been published in Spain for more than twenty years, with more than thirty thousand copies sold so far. The cartoonist invites readers to accompany him on the spiritual journey of the protagonist, showing how adults can change their lives after they get married or have children. It is a comic that does not have zombies or superheroes, but it contains a deep message that makes people think about what happens after death. In the story, Alex Dogboy meets his death in a car accident and then he awakens at the entrance of heaven. There he meets two fearsome angels who want to know what they need to do to enter heaven. The boy realizes that he is dead and goes through all the phases of mourning. After this automatic process, he returns to life with his soul completely renewed and full of joy for having gone through this poignant experience. The hero is now decided to follow Jesus in everything he does. In front of all the tasks, the questions and the problems that he faces in day-to-day life, Alex has a clear point of reference: Jesus is in charge. With the help of his friends and an angel, he comes up with a tattoo that reminds him that Jesus will help him through everything. The cartoonist's goal is to get people to think about their own relationship with God and their own salvation. It is intended to be an evangelistic tool for children. Alex Dogboy is a middle-class boy who enjoys playing baseball and video games with his best friend Tomi. He also has a very close relationship with his mother. He does not like having to wear suits for work, but he does it out of respect for her. Even though he feels inferior to his older brother, Alex respects him and is always ready to help him. Alex's father is the owner of the electronic company where he works as an accountant. He has four daughters who are all married, except for one who lives a rather solitary life. He is very dedicated to her. His name is Ricardo, but everyone calls him Richi. Alex's best friend Tomi pays a lot of attention to the things he says and does. He likes to spend time with Alex and his other friends, where they talk about music and video games. He has a relationship with the daughter of Alex's boss, although she's older than him and many think that this union will not last long because she doesn't want children and this is very important for Tomi. He thinks that she will change her mind when they get married. As you'll see in the story, Tomi lives at home with his parents, who are very demanding when it comes to their son's work expectations.
